Experience homegrown theater that re-imagines familiar spaces using interactive playbuilding workshops to unearth untold stories. Students will use these stories to build a short play or series of scenes that convey the life of these places and generate discussion. Initial sessions will be focus on storytelling and teamwork; in later sessions participants will act, write, create simple props, and add music.

Marcus Renner is in the second-year of the MFA playwriting program at UC-Riverside. He has degrees in environmental studies from Brown University and the University of Wisconsin-Madison and has worked for over twenty years in environmental and community education. He is specializing in community-based theater and has worked with Cornerstone Theater Company and Impro Theater in Los Angeles.
